COURSE OVERVIEW

A professional course that prepares participants to understand, uphold and communicate the rights and protections workers hold under OSHA.

Safe workplaces depend on workers who know their rights and leaders who respect them. The course covers the right to a safe and healthful workplace, the right to know and understand hazards, and the right to training in a language workers understand.

Participants also cover the right to report hazards without retaliation, access to OSHA records and safety documents, participation in OSHA inspections, and the complaint, appeal and whistleblower protection procedures. Graduates are equipped to build a workplace culture of fairness, trust and compliance.
